spaniel, of unknown origin, that was the property of John Boyle. The dog was bought from William Robinson and retailed by John Rey. Charles was bought by Charles Swan, a Scottish-born farmer, who took the dog to England. The breed was developed as a companion dog, which from the outset was smaller than the modern dog, and was used for hunting hare, and as a countryman's dog. In 1886 he introduced the dog to the Kennel Club.

Description Appearance

The Cavalier King Charles Spaniel is known for their bone structure and well-delineated muzzles. The muzzle is fairly long, with an upper lip that is somewhat longer than the lower lip and a turned up nose. The tail is set fairly high, and can be carried in a striking, curved topline. Their forelegs are straight, and have a slight hint of undercoat. The rear legs are straight and close the dog in. The chest is deep, and the belly is narrow.

Appearance (male) Appearance (female) Temperament

The Cavalier King Charles Spaniel was developed as a companion dog. They are moderately active and intelligent and have been successful as a show dog. They are bold, loyal and affectionate with their family. They like to be the boss, they like attention and affection, and they do not like to be left alone. They are good with children and
